A MEXICAN WOMAN IN THE FIELD.—A Montary of Mexican the control of the Spirit of the Times says, it is generally believed that a company of Mexican lancers, at the late battle, was commanded by a Mexican named Dos Amedos. The writer says:

Seized with a patriotic spirit, she unsexed herself, and, dressed in a full suit of a Captain of Lancers, she desired to be led against the loc, and swore that she would never yield antil the Noghern barbartans were driven from her natal land or until she had shed the last drop of blood in defence of her native country. Frevious to the stack she was paraded before the troops, and greatly spatied and augmented their courage. She harangued them, and desired to be posted at the spot where the first shot should fall, and where the thickest of the battle should rage. It is reported that on the vist of the battle should rage. It is reported that on the vist she led the charge of Lancers which proved fatal to some of our command—among the number the lamented Field. There's an example of heroism worthy the days of old!
